

Although the Attorney General's decision only speculated in a footnote about the viability of credible fear determinations involving particular social group claims, the July 11, 2018, USCIS memo instructs asylum officers to apply Matter of A-B- when making such determinations.<sup>38</sup> The ILRC and CGRS anticipate that this presumption against domestic violence and gang persecution claims will reinforce the overall attitude by DHS officers along the U.S.-Mexico border that asylum seekers should not be given due process required under federal and international law. Advocates have reported instances of Border Patrol agents physically preventing asylum seekers from crossing into U.S. territory to claim fear of return, as well as reports that Border Patrol agents regularly coerce asylum seekers into recanting their expressions of fear by threatening to separate them from their children.<sup>39</sup> Attorneys should be prepared to advocate zealously for their clients in credible fear proceedings and document in detail the country conditions that will support all the elements of your client's asylum claim.

---

<sup>38</sup> USCIS Memo at 8 (stating that asylum officers “should apply all applicable precedents of the Attorney General and BIA” and federal circuit cases in credible fear interviews “to the extent that those cases are not inconsistent with Matter of A-B-”).

<sup>39</sup> See Complaint at 18-28, Al Otro Lado, Inc. v. Duke, No. 2:17-cv-05111-JFW (JPRx) (C.D. Cal. filed July 12, 2017); Dara Lind, Trump keeps making it harder for people to seek asylum legally, Vox, <https://www.vox.com/policy-and-politics/2018/6/5/17428640/border-families-asylum-illegal> (last visited Sept. 25, 2018).